

The 2020 China garlic is about to go on the market

"Recently, the garlic market has declined. The price decline is mainly due to the recent overall decrease in exports. At present, the inventory in the warehouse is still relatively large, and the market liquidity exceeds supply and demand. "Recently, one of garlic exporter said in an interview with the public Media.

"In terms of exports, during the coronavirus worldwide pandemic from February to March, our processing and packaging speed was slow and we could not supply to overseas markets in a timely manner. Our export volume this year has been reduced by about half compared with the same period in previous years. Since March, with the China domestic market as normal, the overall export volume has been basically the same as in previous years. As the end of April, and the main garlic plantation area entered the busy agricultural season, most of the local farmers in Shandong began to return to the hometown to grow peppers and cotton. The shortage of local workers has lower the packaging process. We have slowed down order acceptance and reduced the processing of small packages of garlic, focusing our production on large packages of fresh garlic. "As the garlic exporter said.

When talking about the public crisis that spread to Europe, the garlic exporter said, "At present, we still send about 15 container of fresh garlic every week, and the total of various products is around 40 containers. Delivery process is as normal as before. However, the customs clearance speed is slower than before. We are also more cautious when shipping and communicate with customers in real time. "

We made a prediction on the trend of the garlic market in the coming weeks. "As the sales of old garlic are approaching the end, the harvest of new garlic is about to begin. From past experience, the export volume of garlic will decrease further in the next few weeks. At the beginning of June, new garlic entering the market should have the impact on the garlic market, along with the reduction of garlic export prices. "Garlic exporter said," This season's garlic planting area has increased by 25% -30% compared with last year. Garlic is growing well in most production areas. However, the specific yield depends on the weather conditions after the garlic sprouts are harvested. "
